Introduction

This is the 2nd - and long overdue - draft of the 'Bibliography of Western Language Publications on Asian Anarchism' (1st Draft 2006) And although in comparison with the first draft this second draft has more than doubled in entries (169 against 374 now) the assumptions have remained more or less the same: to give an overview of the available literature for the interested lay-person on anarchism in Asia.

The main goal of the bibliography was to focus on the whereabouts of the movement, more than give an exhaustive overview of the texts produced by the individual members of said movements. Not that you won't find any of these here (and I'll be the last to say I have been very consequent in this effort.) So if, for instance, you are looking for an overview of all Ba Jin's texts in English or French I have to disappoint you (you might want to try Olga Lang or Angel Pino instead)

Another problem content wise is the section on India where there's a number of entries on Vinobha. I haven't read much about his position yet, but plenty of anarchists will contest that he can be labelled an anarchist. At the same time, if authors for whatever reason consider him to be an anarchist, or influenced by some anarchist ideas or practice, then for the time being he's in.

For this edition I have started to look at a number of different anarchist magazines for entries on Asian anarchism (mostly China and Japan) but I lacked the time to do this thoroughly. I hope to improve on that in the next edition (only Mother Earth and the Bulletin de l'Internationale Anarchiste have been done completely). Also I haven't looked yet systematically at the archives of anarchists or others who were in contact with Asian anarchists (again, this was mostly with Japan and China) to see if there are any useful materials there, especially letters and clippings. I'm thinking here of the archives of Max Nettlau, Pierre Ramus, Emma Goldman & Alexander Berkman, the magazine Freedom a.o.

In this edition I have also included more web-links to texts mentioned in the bibliography.

And as is in the nature of bibliographies, they are never finished. Already when closing this one I've found new entries and I will include them in a future 3rd edition.

Some technical remarks: All links given in the bibliography are clickable and should bring you directly to the related text.

In Abstracts: sometimes at the end of the abstract it is mentioned HA, this means the Abstract is taken from 'Historical Abstracts', LoC refers to the Library of Congress. At the end of the bibliography you'll find indexes for keywords and authors.

Thanks to Angel Pino, and Michel Anthony (acratie.eu) for putting me on the tracks of some entries before unknown to me. Thanks also to my good friend Tyrell Haberkorn. And special thanks to Kees Rodenburg for some last minute corrections and help in digging up and checking some documents from the International Institute of Social History collections. And finally thanks to the staff of the reading room of the International Institute for Social History for their generous help.

The New Century (Xinshiji) Magazine and the Introduction of Anarchism to China / Paul Clifford. - in: Wiener Beitrage Zur Geschichte Der Neuzeit, vol. 7 (1980): pp. 190.

Abstract: "From the very founding of the Chinese anarchist periodical, Xinshiji [New Century] in Paris in 1907 its concept of anarchist communism and anarchosyndicalism contained a substantive strand of republican nationalism, amounting to an extensive departure from anarchist orthodoxy. Most New Century group members were active in the consolidation of the new-born republic after 1911 and several of them participated prominently in the Guomindang in the 1920's." Period: 1905-13. 28. Dirlik, Arif Socialism and Anarchism in Early Republican China / Arif Dirlik and Edward S. Krebs. - in: Modern China, vol. 7 (1981), no. 2: pp. 117-51.

Notes: Later published in a revised version in 'Anarchism in the Chinese Revolution' (Ch. 4)

Abstract: "The debates between the socialist Jiang Kanghu (Chiang K'anghu, 1883-1945) and the anarchist-communist Liu Sifu (Liu Ssufu, 1884-1915), demonstrate the content of the controversy over the nature of socialism in early Republican China. Sifu's socialism was revolutionary socialism, opposed to participation in politics, antigovernment and anticapitalist. He was convinced that the innate goodness of human nature had been corrupted by political institutions. Jiang and Sun Zhongshan (Sun Yat-sen), Sifu's frequent targets, saw politics as a means of achieving social revolution, and were more concerned with attaining equality of opportunity than absolute equality. As socialism lost its revolutionary character, anarchism competed with communism for leadership of mass movements, but the anarchists' lack of political organization led to their disappearance from the scene in the late 1920's." (HA - Abstracter: K. W. Berger)

The New Culture Movement Revisited : Anarchism and the Idea of Social Revolution in New Culture Thinking / Arif Dirlik. - in: Modern China, vol. 11 (1985), no. 3: pp. 251-300.

ISSN: 0097-7004

Notes: In a revised version later published in 'Anarchism in the Chinese Revolution' (Ch. 5)

Abstract: "Although the anarchist movement in China, which began before the May Fourth Movement (1919) and ended in the late 1920's, has received little attention in historical literature, it was a major contributor to the development of Chinese social radicalism. The movement arose primarily from the development of groups in Paris and Canton, which were active in work-study programs, teaching Esperanto, and organizing students. Among the ideas they promoted were a cultural revolution against aspects of traditional Chinese society that continued to control and restrict the freedom of the individual, and the advancement of education, especially in the sciences. The anarchists were instrumental in forging links between social radicals and labor. Many early leaders of the Chinese Communist movement had experience with anarchist organizations, and the anarchists helped to introduce an understanding of the Russian Revolution in China. Period: 1912-1928." (HA - Abstracter: K. W. Berger)

Vision and Revolution : Anarchism in Chinese Revolutionary Thought on the Eve of the 1911 Revolution / Arif Dirlik. - in: Modern China, vol. 12 (1986), no. 2: pp. 123-65.

Notes: In a revised version later published in 'Anarchism in the Chinese Revolution' (Ch. 3)

Abstract: Two Chinese anarchist societies were begun in 1907. The one in Paris was called Xin shijie she (Hsin Shih-chieh She), or the New World Society, and was led by Li Shizeng (Li Shih-tseng), Wu Zhihui (Wu Chih-hui) and Zheng Jingjiang (Cheng Ching-chiang). The other, established in Tokyo, was called Shehui zhuyi jiangxihui (Shehui Chu-yi Chiang-hsihui), or the Society for the Study of Socialism, and was led by Liu Shipei (Liu Shi-p'ei) and He Zhen (Ho Chen). They differed in some respects (e.g., the former opposed native trends while the latter supported them), but they shared a commitment to a utopian society. The major contribution of the anarchists toward socialist theory in China was a reorientation of revolution from political to social and cultural goals. Period: 1907-11. (HA - Abstracter: K. W. Berger)

Notes: Later published as a revised version in 'Anarchism in the Chinese Revolution' (Ch. 6)

Abstract: Issues, choices and limitations of the Chinese anarchist movement and the Communist revolutionaries between 1921 and 1927.

32. Dirlik, Arif

The Revolution that never was : Anarchism in the Guomindang / Arif Dirlik. - in: Modern China, vol. 15 (1989), no. 4: pp. 419-62.

Notes: Later published in a revised version in 'Anarchism in the Chinese Revolution' (Ch. 7)

Abstract: "The participation of certain major anarchist leaders in Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist Party in China in 1927-28 led to controversy within anarchist ranks. The founding of a National Labor University to train people in agriculture, industry, and the social sciences, as well as the attempt to use Sun Yat-sen's Three Principles of the People to achieve anarchist aims, opened the anarchists to charges that they had abandoned anarchism's true philosophy. This internal division weakened the anarchist movement and made the Nationalists' suppression of anarchism in 1929 that much easier." (HA - Abstracter: D. D. Buffton)

Abstract: "The 20th century represented a period of revolutionary politics for China which began with the proclamation of the republic and with the participation of student activists in revolutionary organizations. The author remembers Chang Chi, a representative figure of this generation and one of the leaders of the student movement, profoundly involved in the research for a new ideology which would create support for his revolutionary aspirations. Contacts with Japanese anarchists and young Europeans influenced him very much and Chang remained attracted to heroism, individualism, and liberty. At 29, in 1911, he returned to China to find his role in the post-revolutionary world which had been created." Period: 1911. (HA - Abstracter: J.)

May Fourth : Symbol of the Spirit of Bring-It-Here-Is for Chinese Intellectuals / Mabel Lee. - in: Papers on Far Eastern History (1990), no. 41: pp. 77-96.

Abstract: "Examines the writings of Zhang Taiyan (1869-1936), Chen Duxiu (1879-1942) and Li Dazhao (1889-1927) to throw light on the intellectual foundations of Lu Xun's "bring-it-here-ism," which was the essential framework of the May Fourth Movement. There emerged among Chinese intellectuals living in Japan the foundations of a modern philosophy of the self influenced by both European anarchist writings and Nietzsche. These Tokyo-based intellectuals differed from a counterpart group centered in Paris by having a bias toward seeking exemplars with "anarchist" leanings from China's own history and by being primarily concerned with the emancipation of the individual from the restraints of society and the right of the individual to personal autonomy." Feminism : an Organic or an Extremist Position? On Tien Yee as Represented by He Zhen / Liu Huiying. - in: Positions : East Asia Cultures Critique, vol. 11 (2003), no. 3: pp. 779-800 .

Abstract: "It is not strange that the name of He Zhen is little known outside the very small group of researchers specializing in modern and near-modern history.1 He Zhen, who lived in a time of "chaos," a time when Chinese society was entering modernity and when all kinds of historical characters teemed, did not emerge until the establishment of the journal Tien Yee [Natural justice] in Tokyo in 1907. But the life of the journal was less than a year. Later He Zhen sank low to become a "woman spy" for the Manchu Qing government, and still later she lived in seclusion for many years and eventually died of madness and cloistering. Today the only reliable source available for us to look for historical traces of this woman He Zhen is the text of Tien Yee. Instead of perusing the many enlightenment texts about female rights (nüquan) written by male authors and constructed in the discourse of the nation-state, let us reexamine carefully the articles authored by He Zhen and the journal Tien Yee edited by her. I am surprised by her originality, [End Page 779] clear-mindedness, and sharpness, which were rather rare among the few “new women” then and which place her beyond comparison with those men who enthusiastically propagated “female rights.” He Zhen’s voice is unique.

Tien Yee: Anarchism or Feminism?

Although Tien Yee is considered by latecomers as China’s first anarchist journal, and He Zhen, Liu Shipai, and others did publish a number of articles and viewpoints propagating anarchism, I have to say that anarchism did not seem to be its original focus, let alone the only ism that it supported. It is noteworthy that its publication announcement stated that Tien Yee was the institutional journal of the Society for the Restoration of Women’s Rights (Nüzi Fuquan Hui). More than half of the text of the announcement was concerned with the “women problem” in history...”

Abstract: "The history of Esperanto in China was for long periods closely linked with anarchism. This article surveys the connection in the years up to 1920, and sets out to show which groups used which arguments to agitate for Esperanto, in order to throw light on the complexity of the relationship between language and politics in China, especially in the first half of the twentieth century.”

"From the early 1900s to the late 1930s, anarchists in Japan and China formulated revolutionary social changes to the family, including issues of love, marriage and child-rearing and sexuality. A proposed "family revolution" in the late Qing period has often been quoted as representing the social impact of Chinese anarchists, but anarchist debate over fundamental family issues in both Japan and China continued into the 1930s, ranging over wider aspects, and reflecting a variety of radical approaches..." Middle County Radicalism : the May Fourth Movement in Hangzhou / Wen-hsin Yeh. - in: China Quarterly (1994), no. 140: pp. 903-25.

Abstract: "May Fourth activity in the Chinese province of Zhejiang was especially prevalent among the students of Hangzhou's Teachers College. Contrary to the activism of Beijing and Shanghai, Hangzhou youth (largely from the very conservative middle counties of Zhejiang) were driven to radicalism "out of a fundamentalist ardour to salvage the ethical intent of the Confucianism they had imbibed in their family and village schools." The contrast between the idealization of their backward home villages and the reality of Hangzhou led them to radical action and, in the case of Shi Cuntong, to anarchism." Period: 1911-21. 'Death As Life': Political Metaphor in the Testimonial Prison Literature of Kanno Suga / Hélène Bowen Raddeker. - in: Bulletin of Concerned Asian Scholars, vol. 29 (1997), no. 4: pp. 3-12.

Abstract: "This essay argues that what most clearly reveals Kanno Suga's last texts to be "resistance literature" was her use of figurative language to express the idea that death is life. In the prison diary and letters she wrote in the week before her execution for treason, Kanno repeatedly used metaphors of regeneration in connection with her faith in the revolutionary immortality she and her co-defendants would be accorded and in the ultimate victory of Truth and the anarchist Cause. Appearances notwithstanding, the Japanese state had only won this round of the fight. This essay also reflects upon the plural nature of Kanno's resistance whereby in these late texts, in effect, she practiced a subversion of more than one social institution. Attributing to Kanno a subversion of literary canons as well, the author situates the prison diary within a transnational "out-law" genre of autobiography described today as "testimonio" (testimonial literature)." Anarcho-Feminist Discourse in Pre-War Japan : Ito Noe’s Autobiographical Social Criticism / Hélène Bowen Raddeker. - in: Anarchist Studies, vol. 9 (2001), no. 2: pp. 97-125.

Abstract: “The paper looks at works written by Ito Noe (1895-1923), concentrating particularly on those published late in her life. In it I argue that individualistic or egotistic anarchism informed her construction of her Self in these essays about love, marriage and the family; conditioned her ultimate feminist standpoint; and also contributed to the form in which she wrote. Her gender, her feminism and her radical individualism, I contend, converged to render it well-nigh inevitable that the style in which she wrote social criticism would be intimately personal (-political) or autobiographical.

The paper begins with a brief account of the early twentieth century anarchist and feminist movements. I then set the scene for a discussion of Ito’s egoism by commenting on Japanese state policies toward women from the late-nineteenth century and on the hegemonic ideal of the ‘good wife, wise mother’. After offering a reading of Ito’s egoistic feminist resistance to this, particularly in narratives or essays focused on her ‘free love’ partnership, I end with some reflections on the relation to the liberal-humanist genre of autobiography of her ‘out-law’ autobiographical style.” (Abstract from the author)

Abstract: Anarchism was an important social and political movement in prewar Japan, promoted by Kotoku Shusui in the first decade of the 20th century and developed into a rich political and artistic philosophy by Osugi Sakae in the 1910s. Japanese anarchists saw industrial capitalism as the cause of the suffering of the working class, and sought the destruction of the capitalist system and of all external government, championing individualistic rebellion as the vehicle of revolution. Literary anarchism gave artistic form to the values of anarchism and sought to promote political and social revolution. This dissertation explores selected works of literature by anarchists in order to trace the development of an anarchistic style. Chapter One identifies the main elements of literary anarchism: realistic reporting on the lives of the poor; the reification of concepts like “nature” and “life” in a philosophy celebrating the growth and evolution of individuals and society; the championing of violent, nihilistic rebellion; and radical individualism. The origins of these elements are explored in a discussion of earlier journalistic writers and the fiction of early Japanese naturalist writers like Shimazaki Toson. Chapter Two discusses the creation of a truly anarchist literature through Osugi Sakae’s anarchistic philosophy of art, which was put into practice by writers like Miyajima Sukeo, who welded the elements of journalism and naturalism to a firmly anarchist political stance, creating a dramatic new form of revolutionary literature. Chapter Three discusses the development of anarchist literature through the late 1920s. Two important “proletarian” writers with heavily anarchist sympathies, Hirabayashi Taiko and Yamakawa Ryo, utilized realistic prose and anarchistic themes to deal with the conflicts which attended their lives as members of the “proletarian” movement. Also discussed is the flourishing of anarchist avant-garde poetry by such writers as Hagiwara Kyojiro. Such poetry gave anarchism its most dramatic and original expression, but also revealed the decline of anarchism as a political movement due to internal conflicts and external persecution by the government.

Abstract: "The aim of this study is to examine the connections between literary modernism and urban modernity in interwar Japan. It focuses on the works of two writers, Hagiwara Kyôjirô (1899 - 1938) and Hayashi Fumiko (1903 -1951), over the period 1923 - 1931. ...The second and fifth chapters will focus on the relationship between individual subjectivity and the social and cultural forms of the modern city, as expressed in Hagiwara Kyôjirô's two poetry collections, Shikei senkoku (Death Sentence), 1925, and Danpen (Fragments), 1931. These chapters will also document Hagiwara's involvement with the anarchist political movement and the avant-garde artists' group Mavo. ... The five main chapters will be followed by biographical information on key persons introduced in the main text, and translations of selected poetry and manifestoes by Hagiwara Kyôjirô and his associates". The People at Rest : the Anarchist Origins of Ogawa Usen's 'Nihonga' / Konishi Sho. - in: World Art, 1 (2011): no. 2: pp. 235-256

Abstract: This essay revises our understanding of Ogawa Usen, a prolific artist known for his contributions to the genre of Nihonga, 'Japanese-style painting,' in early twentieth century Japan. Nihonga was founded to appreciate and preserve 'Japanese arts.' Leading representatives of Nihonga aestheticized 'Japan' in nostalgic representations of the nation. By considering Usen's art from the Russo-Japanese War (1904-1905) when Usen's work first gained popularity, the essay argues that Usen intended his work to express anarchist ideas of progress antithetical to the nostalgic sense of yearning for a vanishing national culture. According to some of the most recognized anarchist figures from the movement, human progress would be guided by anarchist principles that valued the everyday doing of common people, each with his or her own creative energy and talent to contribute to society. Usen first gained public attention as a cartoon illustrator for the Nonwar Movement against the state. Although museums and art historians have overlooked Usen's cartoons, his cartoons are a clear expression of the ideas behind his body of work, and among the earliest examples of his distinctive style. They reveal that the artist cannot be understood within the bifurcated framework of West vs. East, modern vs. tradition, global time vs. nationalized space. With Usen, the arts began to be understood as everyday practices of everyone, rather than 'high culture.' This new genre of anarchist art of, for, and by everyone began to include other art movements, including Mingei, Children's Free Arts, and Farmer's Arts. This introduction of Usen to Western historiography thus calls for a new lens to interpret some of the most innovative artistic currents in modern Japanese cultural history.

Notes: Based upon Konishi's Thesis (Ph. D.): Cooperatist modernity : anarchism and Japanese-Russian transintellectual relations in modern Japan--University of Chicago, Dept. of History, August 2003. - 2 v. (vii, 417 leaves) ; 28 cm.

Contains: Revoliutsiia meets Ishin : the emerging vision of cooperatist civilization -- Anarchist religion : translation and conversion beyond western modernity -- The nonwar movement in the Russo-Japanese War : the invention of the people without the state -- The history slide -- Translingual world order : language without culture -- Nature in culture, culture in nature : phagocytes, dung beetles and the cosmos. Sho Konishi traces the emergence from 1860 to 1930 of transnational networks of Russian and Japanese "cooperatist anarchists" devoted to creating a state-free society. Arguing that this radical movement forms one of the intellectual foundations of modern Japan, Konishi offers a new approach to Japanese history that challenges Western narratives. (WorldCat)

Ordinary farmers living anarchist time : Arishima Cooperative Farm in Hokkaido, 1922-1935 / Konishi Sho. - in: Modern Asian Studies, 47 (2013): no. 6: pp. 1845-1887

Abstract: This paper offers a fresh anarchist history of modern rural experience at the heart of Japan's modernization project in Hokkaido. The rationalization of agricultural methods and the establishment of big farms in Hokkaido worked by tenant farmers served the dual purpose of both colonizing and modernizing Japan's northern frontier. Against the idea of progress imbued in that colonial project, the anarchist and celebrity writer, Arishima Takeo, liberated his tenant farmers by dissolving his tenant farm in Niseko in 1922. The farmers were made the new cooperative owners. Members of the farm, made famous during widespread tenant-farmer disputes, believed they stood at the heart of progress. 'Sōgo fujō' (mutual aid) was viewed as an ethic for social transformation, democracy and elimination of hierarchy that linked the farmers with the wider world. It was the farmers' consciousness of working in a new era, better than ever before, that made them modern. Their community offers us a case study of the imagination and experience of modern temporality amongst the most unlikely subjects of the modern, ordinary agricultural laborers in rural Asia in the early twentieth century. This anarchist history challenges the conceptual framework that has categorized rural Japan as the seat of conservative politics, nativism and traditionalism, and the antithesis of modernity. Apparently international solidarity was lacking because there were subsequent calls to donate money to the fund. In the end 4 £ 9 s. was made available to the widows.

Abstract: Explores the leftist subculture, focusing on two revolutionary figures. Abstract: After an analysis of the birth of the modern Workers' Movement in its historical links with the Movement for democratic rights and freedom in the 1880s, the theses studies the relationship between nationalism and internationalism and their correlation in early days of the Workers' Movement. The internationalism of unionised Workers is expressed by the way they supported the creation of a social-Democratic Party, which was forbidden the day after, but whose activities were taken over by the members of the Socialist Association. Under these circumstances we can explain the existence of an anti-colonialist, anti-imperialist, peaceful and socialist political trend attracted towards the IInd International. This political trend built itself up around the weekly Heimin shinbun which became the paradigm of the Japanese Socialist Movement until after the First World War; and even later it had political and ideological ramifications until the 1930s. The repression of this Movement in 1911 suppressed their main leaders, but didn't eliminate its two trends: one close to the left and extreme-Left wing of the Second International, the other close to American and European Anarchism. The internationalist character of the first Socialist Movement in Japan was remarkable, emphasizing the “globalization” of ideological trends at the end of the XIXth and at the beginning of the XXth century, before the First World War initiated the “nationalization” of the Labour Movements.

Kotoku Shusui and Nationalism / Fred G. Notehelfer. - in: Journal of Asian Studies, 31 (1971): no. 1. - pp. 31-39

Abstract: Kotoku Shusui is generally known as a Japanese socialist and anarchist thinker who participated in a plot against the life of the Meiji emperor in 1910 and was subsequently executed on a charge of high treason. This article explores Kotoku's response to nationalism. The author argues that Kotoku was and remained a nationalist, but that his image of nationalism--that of a popular and radical force directed to internal transformation rather than foreign expansion--differed considerably from that of the Meiji leadership. The article addresses itself to this image, to how it was derived, and how it was sustained. (from WorldCat)

A traveling text : Souvenirs entomologiques, Japanese Anarchism and Shanghai Neo-sensationism / Peng Hsiao-yen. - in: NTU Studies in Language and Literature, (2007), no. 17: pp. 1-42.

Abstract: The Hong Kong poet Ogai Kamome (Ouwai Ou) published a seemingly nonsensical palm-of-the-hand story in Furen huabao (The women's pictorial) in 1934. Titled "Yanjiu chujiao de sangeren" (The three who study antennas), it used the science of insect behavior to interpret man-and-woman love in a playful fashion, typical of Neo-Sensationist stories. But the meaning of the mini-story goes beyond pleasantry. Although no names or books are ever mentioned, it implies Lu Xun's advocacy of Jean-Henri Fabre's ten volume work Souvenirs entomologiques: étude sur l'instinct et les moeurs des insectes (Memories of insects: study on the instinct and manners of insects; 1879-1907) during the 1920s. Lu Xun, who did not know French, read the Japanese translation, titled Konchūki (Book of insects, 1922-1931), by Osugi Sakae and Shiina Sonoji, two anarchists during the Daishō period. The intriguing questions this paper addresses include: Why were anarchists attracted to Fabre's work? Did it ever occur to Lu Xun, who used Fabre's work to comment on the Chinese national character, that science carried special meanings for anarchism? Was Ogai Kamome, intending to ridicule intellectuals like Lu Xun, aware of the complex implications of Fabre's work, including his famous disputes with Charles Darwin on the theory of evolution? This paper will explore how texts and ideas travel in the Euro-Asian context, and how certain values are lost during the transaction, while others are accrued during the process. Men and Social Ideas of the Early Taisho Period / Gino K. Piovesana. - in: Monumenta Nipponica, vol. 19 (1964), no. 1-2: pp. 111-29.

Abstract: "The waning of Japanese socialism followed the hanging of a dozen radicals, including Kotoku Shusui, in 1911 for lese majesty, with Kojiro repudiating socialism, Isoo taking up the propagation of baseball, and Katayama Sen fleeing to America and Russia. Active in the socialist world were Yamakawa Hitoshi and Sakai Toshihiko in an internal, meditative way. Osugi Sakae and Arahata Kanson more or less followed revolutionary anarchism and Bersonian vitalism in the 1920's, with the former typical of the Taisho era. Kawakami Hajime was a social humanist typical of the Marxists of the 1920's. Literary-cultural prototypes were Saneatsu, Takeo, and Kyakuzo. Kawakami attained a great psychological following. Suzuki Bunji and Kagawa Toyohiko led the Christian tradition, in contrast to Osugi and Kawakami, holding out for democratic socialism and being forerunners of the union movement of the 1920's." Period: 1911-20's. (HA - Abstracter: R. Bock)

Notes: Includes the first English translation of Kōtoku Shūsui's Imperialism by Robert Thomas Tierney

Abstract: "This extended monograph examines the work of the radical journalist Kōtoku Shūsui and Japan's anti-imperialist movement of the early twentieth century. It includes the first English translation of Kotoku Shusui's classic 1901 work Teikokushugi (Imperialism). Shūsui was a Japanese socialist, anarchist, and critic of Japan's imperial expansionism who was executed in 1911 for his alleged participation in a plot to kill the Emperor. Imperialism was one of the first systematic criticisms of imperialism published anywhere in the world. In this seminal text, Shūsui condemns global imperialism as the commandeering of politics by national elites and denounces patriotism and militarism as the principal causes of imperialism. In addition to the translation, author and translator Robert Tierney offers an in-depth study of Shūsui's text and of the early anti-imperialist movement he led. Tierney's study places Shūsui's book within the broader context of early twentieth-century debates on the nature and causes of imperialism. It also offers a detailed account of the different stages of the Japanese anti-imperialist movement. (...)” (Provided by publisher)

Abstract: Ôsugi Sakae (1885-1923) is an emblematic figure of anarchism in Japan. Beyond his life full of adventures and his tragic death, he embodies a conceptualization and praxis of anarchism during the Taisho democracy era. His philosophy, which goes through anarcho-syndicalist activism, is based upon a mix of vitalism and social individualism which put bases for a modern spontaneity in Japan. Osugi Sakae trespasses the dilemma to know what if socialism, in its anarchist mood, would be strange or impossible in a country, Japan, which is view as apart by the past or present traditionalist people. / Ôsugi Sakae (1885-1923) est une figure emblématique de l'anarchisme au Japon. Au-delà de sa vie aventureuse et de sa fin tragique, il incarne une conceptualisation et une praxis de l'anarchisme lors de la démocratie Taishô. Sa philosophie, qui débouche sur le militantisme anarcho-syndicaliste, repose sur un mélange de vitalisme et d'individualisme social qui jette les bases d'une spontanéité moderniste au Japon. Ôsugi Sakae transcende ainsi la question de l'étrangeté ou de l'impossibilité du socialisme - dans sa version libertaire - au sein d'un pays, le Japon, que les traditionalistes du passé ou du présent considèrent comme à part.

Abstract: “Traces anarchism as an intellectual movement in Japan from its beginnings to the students’ revolt in the 1960’s. Anarchists are weak in numbers today, with only a limited direct influence among student movements. Anarchism originated in antiwar campaigns early in this century. Destruction and surrender in 1945 seemed to give anarchists their opportunity, along with the renaissance of the student movement in the postwar era. Many factional struggles have occurred among the students on the Left, but left-wing forces were able to intensify their campaigns after the bombing of North Vietnam in 1965. A climax came when militant students and well armed police fought desperately. Students did not appear anxious to gain the cooperation of workers, since they regarded themselves as the main army of the revolution. Student power and violence seem to have been sustained in the late 1960’s by the emotional anarchy of nihilism rather than anarchism itself. Both the strength and weakness of modern Japanese anarchism is that it has become as much an ethical as a political ideology.” (HA - Abstracter: H. Weisser)

Notes: There is slight confusion here about the name of the author. In an unsigned introduction to the article it is mentioned that the article is written by the Japanese radical T. Yamaga. At the end of the bibliography it is signed with Y. Yamaga. As the only other entry I have from Yamaga is listed under T. Yamaga I will follow that. Thanks to Kees Rodenburg for bringing this to my attention.

Notes: Orig. ed. publ. by Anarchist Federation of Japan / Anarkista Federacio Japania, 1957. - Text in Esperanto and English. - It seems that the original intention was to have a separate Esperanto (Japanaj martiraj de Anarkismo movado) and English section but probably due to some lay-out / photo copy hick-up part of the english section landed on the esperanto side.

Abstract: Text is concerned with introducing the martyrs of the Kotoku affair in Japan (1910-1911) and other early anarchists.

Notes: Thesis (Ph.D.) - Australian National University, 2003.

Abstract: "From the early 1900s to the late 1930s, anarchists in Japan and China formulated revolutionary social changes to the family, including issues of love, marriage and child-rearing and sexuality. A proposed "family revolution" in the late Qing period has often been quoted as representing the social impact of Chinese anarchists, but anarchist debate over fundamental family issues in both Japan and China continued into the 1930s, ranging over wider aspects, and reflecting a variety of radical approaches..." Ambivalent Social Darwinism in Korea / J. Michael Allen. - in: International Journal of Korean History (2001), no. 2: pp. 1-24.

Abstract: "Explores the work of Sin Ch'ae-ho (1880-1936), the Korean writer and nationalist who first adopted the tenets of social Darwinism as presented by Chinese intellectual Liang Qichao when Japan began moves to annex Korea. Sin lived in exile in China during Japan's occupation of Korea, attempting to reconcile Social Darwinism to Korea's situation without validating Japan's imperialism. His view of history during the 1920's became one of struggle between "I" and "not-I," with "I" being at the level of nations. Sin rejected the racism in social Darwinism and, through the works of Petr Kropotkin, added anarchism to his beliefs. He wrote the "Declaration of Korean Independence" in 1923 as he endeavored to find a place for Korea as an autonomous nation." Period: 1920's. (HA - Abstracter: K. Hautajarvi)

History, Nation, People : Past and Present in the Writing of Sin Ch'aeho / J. Michael Allen. - Seattle : University of Washington, 1999. - i, 393 leaves ; 29 cm.

Notes: Ph. D. University of Washington, 1999. Adviser : James B. Palais

Abstract: "Sin Ch'aeho (1880 - 1936), an essayist, historian, and political activist hailed as an unflinching patriot and a historiographical pioneer. It analyzes... [the] bifurcation in his writing in the 1920s between historical studies and impassioned anarchist manifestoes seems to have been one way in which Sin attempted to resolve these contradictions. It was, however, a resolution manqué, as telling for the gaps it left as for those it filled. Sin explored a variety of methodological approaches throughout his life. As his exposure to new ideas changed his historical and political views, in his writing hero-worship was replaced by other modes of historical analysis, and a patriotic devotion to country in a time of crisis was replaced by other modes of political engagement, based on a more encompassing view of domestic and international events.

Sin Ch'aeho found much to criticize in Korea's past, especially Confucianism and its hold on traditional Korean historical writing. He sought to rescue Korean civilization not from obscurity, but from theft. This was the focus of his writing and of much of his political activism. If he left a legacy for contemporary Korean historians it is the elevation of the subjective, non- subservient nation as the primary actor on the historical stage, even if that nation was more ideal than real. In carrying out this project, Sin rejected the universalism of Confucianism, embraced the particularism of Korean nationalism, and then re-universalized his thinking, this time in the dual (and contradictory) modes of social Darwinism and anarchism”.

L'histoire du mouvement anarchiste coréen des origines à 1931 / Oh Jang-Whan. - [S.l. : s.n.], 1987

Abstract: "Korean anarchism was based on a search of liberty and equality and for Korea's independence. It developed among the Korean revolutionaries in China, and Korean students in Japan, and was influenced by the special conditions of their host countries : the national tendency in China, the ideological tendency in Japan. In China, as from 1920, the revolutionaries and terrorist groups developed into anarchism, which relied particularly on violent methods. Among them, Sin Chai-Ho and Li Hoi-Yong were the great leaders, which originated from the nationalist current. On the other hand, Kim Won-Bong's Euiyul Dan (Society of the Braves), the great terrorist group, used terrorist actions based upon anarchist theory. The famous Korean revolutionary manifesto of Sin Chai-Ho reveals the nationalistic tendency of Korean anarchism. In Japan, Pak Yul attempted to create an ideal society through the anarchist group Huku Hoi (Black Friends Association). In Korea, anarchism was dominated by Pak Yul's doctrines until the end of the 1920s.
